Electronic Tracking
Concealment Devices - Electronic, Video and Still Photography

Police Departments that have purchased technical equipment such as GPS tracking system, often do not have the time and resources to fully utilize and properly maintain these devices. Batteries are allowed to deplete, firmware is not updated, and a costly and potentially useful piece of technology becomes a paper weight. CRI maintains an inventory of fully-charged and updated technical equipment ready for immediate use. CRI also researches and test cameras in concealments, recorders, tracking tools, and other sophisticated electronics to afford law enforcement the most up-to-date crime fighting tools.

CRI is a non-profit organization established to provide technical support to law enforcement agencies. Since its formation, CRI - which is aided by retired law enforcement volunteers - has provided technical equipment and support to federal, state and local law enforcement agencies. Many times these agencies do not have the funding nor the expertise to buy and maintain the equipment needed to effectively conduct investigations. CRI researches, purchases and maintains cameras, recording mechanisms, tracking devices and other technical products and provides these high-tech tools free of charge to police departments.

Testimonies

R. Steven Bailey, Chief of Police Miami Township, Clermont County Police Dept.

Mike Elam has been very responsive to our needs and has assisted us in many ways with a variety of complex investigations.

His technical expertise and broad range of support capabilities has been very beneficial to us.

With his cooperation we have saved the taxpayers thousands of dollars and closed cases that might have gone unsolved.

Chief Jamey Mills, Milford, Ohio Police Dept.

"CRI is one of our best crime fighting partners. The equipment and expertise that the company provides to law enforcement are invaluable."

Captain Mike Dressell, Asst. Chief – Indian Hill Rangers

"Our department has had the opportunity to partner with Mike Elam, and his staff, at CRI Inc., in several criminal investigations. Mr. Elam was able to provide surveillance equipment that allowed us to obtain video evidence that led to a confession and five felony indictments in a theft case involving the loss of $77,000 in currency and jewelry. The Indian Hill Rangers Police Department has, like many local agencies, has been forced to drastically reduce its' budget. Surveillance equipment is both expensive and one of the first cuts made to investigative funding. Business owners like Mr. Elam are few and far between in their enthusiasm to assist us in such a charitable fashion. Many law enforcement agencies, in and around Hamilton County, have benefitted from his generosity, and their citizens have reaped the rewards of reduced crime and successful criminal prosecutions."
